Sixto Díaz Rodríguez, el llamado Hombre Misterioso, deja un gran legado

Por Amber Ogden
Sixto Díaz Rodríguez, el misterioso hombre que cantaba de espaldas a la audiencia y era conocido por tomarse fotos con su público después del concierto, fue un hombre sencillo, que amaba la música; conocido como el 'Sugar Man' refiriéndose a una de sus más famosas canciones. El hombre y su leyenda fallecieron recientemente a la edad de 81 años a causa de una repentina enfermedad. Residió como mexicano de segunda generación, nació y creció en el suroeste de Detroit y vivió allí hasta su fallecimiento.

Aprendió a tocar la guitarra a los 16 años y se enamoró para siempre de la música, siendo allí donde comenzó su poco ortodoxa carrera.

By Amber Ogden
Sixto Diaz Rodriguez, a man of mystery who often performed with his back to his audience and was known to take photos of himself in front of an audience after performing, was a modest man that simply loved music. He was also known as 'Sugar Man,' a reference to one of his many cutting-edge songs. The man and the legend recently passed away at the age of 81 following a short-term illness. He resided as a second-generation Mexican, born and raised in Southwest Detroit, until his passing.

Picking up his family guitar at 16 and forever falling in love with music is where his unorthodox career began. As an inconspicuous young adult, he would perform locally all throughout the city of Detroit. As he pursued his music career, he worked a blue-collar job in the auto industry to create an honest living like many Detroiters in the 60s and 70s.

Detroit and Philadelphia Partner to Host National Street Art Summit Event to be held in conjunction with nationally renowned BlkOutWalls Festival

Detroit and Philadelphia, cities named by USA Today and a panel of judges as the Top Ten Cities in America with beautiful street art, are partnering to host a National Street Art Summit in Detroit on September 8, 2023.

The Summit, which is being held in conjunction with the nationally renowned BLKOUT Walls Mural festival, will bring arts leaders from the Top Ten cities in 2022 and 2023 to have a conversation about the rising mural movement in America, what cities are doing to encourage mural art, what cities can learn from each other and what ideas can be exchanged to make life easier for the artists. Philadelphia is No. 1 and Detroit is No. 5 on the 2023 list.

The event is slated for 3 p.m. Friday, September 8, 2023 at the Wayne County Community College District's Curtis L. Ivery Downtown Campus, 1001 West Fort Street. WCCCD, a partner on the summit, will host an entrepreneurial workshop for students and emerging artists the day before the summit. Top Ten Cities guests will take a mural tour of Detroit street art the day after the summit.

"Murals, as an art form, are not just being accepted, but are being celebrated in America," said Rochelle Riley, Detroit's director of Arts and Culture. "We are thrilled to partner with Mural Arts Philadelphia to continue to make the creative arts a part of any conversation about what is making cities better and more beautiful." Jane Golden of Mural Arts Philadelphia, agreed.

"Public art is a powerful medium that can transform urban spaces and fuel social change," said Golden, Executive Director of Mural Arts Philadelphia. "This partnership between Detroit and Philadelphia emphasizes the vital role that creativity plays in our cities, while opening up new opportunities for muralists nationwide. Together, we're pushing forward the conversation on mural art and its potential to beautify, inspire, and empower communities."

The conversation will occur on the eve of BLKOUT Walls, the national festival conceived by celebrated artists Sydney James of Detroit, Thomas "Detour" Evans of Denver and Max Sansing of Chicago in response to their shared history of participating in mural festivals with no remuneration for participating artists and with limited racial diversity. The trio kicked off the brand in Detroit in 2021.

<https://www.blkoutwalls.com/>
Detroit has undertaken a citywide effort to bring beautiful murals to neighborhoods across the city, all part of Mayor Mike Duggan's Blight to Beauty campaign. The campaign involves multiple city departments, including the Planning and Development Department, the Department of Public Works and City Walls, a division of the General Services Department's anti-blight unit, which paints over hundreds of thousands of yards of graffiti across the city and replaces some of the blank spaces with beautiful murals.

The City is documenting every map in the city on the Detroit Mural Map, which was launched in 2022 and is connected to an app that lets users identify murals on site. More than 500 murals live on the site now. The map can be found at detroitartsandculture.com.

Free Your Mind: Art and Incarceration in Michigan at MOCAD through September 10

Free Your Mind: Art and Incarceration in Michigan, showcasing inner worlds of incarcerated individuals and the fundamental issues that shape conversations around incarceration today, will be on exhibit in Mike Kelley’s Mobile Homestead at MOCAD through September 10, 2023. The Michigan Justice Fund, a statewide initiative of the Community Foundation for Southeast Michigan, the Eli and Edythe Broad Art Museum, the Prison Creative Arts Project at the University at Michigan and MOCAD are partnering in this impactful exhibit, which first opened in April.

Working with a coalition of more than a dozen organizations, Free Your Mind features the work of artists, and advocates with lived experience in the criminal legal system. The majority of these artists are either currently or formerly incarcerated. The exhibition centers on four key topics of inquiry: Michigan’s length of sentencing and overcrowding in prisons; the impact of incarceration on women; youth incarceration; and the dangers of COVID-19. Free Your Mind is presented at MOCAD with support from the Michigan Justice Fund.

“The Michigan Justice Fund is proud to support the Free Your Mind exhibition which seeks to center and amplify voices and perspectives that we rarely hear – those of the incarcerated,” says Michigan Justice Fund Director Ashley Carter. “This exhibition underscores the urgency of the current moment, and forces us all to grapple with the impact that incarceration has on individuals, their families, and our communities at large.”

In 2021, 64,000 Michigan residents were incarcerated in jails and prisons. More broadly, nearly 253,000 people in Michigan are currently under the carceral umbrella of jail or prison, probation, or parole. Michigan is 10th in the U.S. for the most incarcerated people.

Free Your Mind will also debut a portrait series highlighting leaders working to address systemic issues of mass incarceration statewide. The exhibition seeks to stimulate imagination and activate bold, solution driven responses towards creating a more equitable and just world.

Michigan Justice Fund is comprised of Michigan-based and national funders dedicated to advancing justice reform and the economic mobility of individuals with criminal convictions in Michigan. Since its inception in 2020, $20 million has been committed to the Michigan Justice Fund and more than $9 million has been deployed to organizations throughout the state.

Free Your Mind: Art and Incarceration in Michigan is organized by the Eli and Edythe Broad Art Museum at Michigan State University and curated by Steven L. Bridges, Senior Curator and Director of Curatorial Affairs, and Janie Paul, Senior Curator and Co-founder, Annual Exhibitions of Art by Michigan Prisoners, a project of the Prison Creative Arts Project at the University of Michigan.

The Michigan Justice Fund is a funders’ collaborative that makes investments to stem the flow of individuals into the criminal justice system, supports the investment of public dollars to community-driven alternatives to incarceration, and works to ensure that those who are returning home after incarceration receive the support they need to flourish.

The work of the Michigan Justice Fund is informed by a group of 15 nationwide partners that have made financial commitments to advancing the work towards building a more equitable justice system. Partners include Ballmer Group, Blue Meridian Partners (The Justice and Mobility Fund), Community Foundation for Southeast Michigan, Community Foundation of Greater Flint, DTE Energy Foundation, Ethel & James Flinn Foundation, Ford Foundation, Grand Rapids Community Foundation, Hudson-Webber Foundation,

District Detroit Opens Center to Connect Residents with Jobs and Affordable Housing

By Rogelio Landin

Phase II of The District Detroit is a massive $1.5 billion development. Last week the Opportunity Center, located at Woodward at Montcalm is a first of its kind resource center charged with linking residents with employment and housing opportunities. It was inaugurated at a press conference last Wednesday, August 8, 2023.

It is a crucial first step in the comprehensive development initiative and represents an initial example of promises kept. Having worked with Olympia Development and their partner Related Companies in crafting the Community Benefits Agreement (CBA) in my role as Vice-Chairman of the NAC-Neighborhood Advisory Council, appointed by the City Planning Department, I have every confidence that they will fulfill their commitments to this project and our city with integrity and fidelity.

“The Opportunity Center” will focus on providing information related to positions available near and/or within the district. The project, encompasses 10 new and renovated buildings, generating an estimated 12,000 construction jobs, 6,000 permanent jobs, and nearly 700 units of new housing in Detroit, of which 140 of those units will be designated as affordable.

The Opportunity Center will connect people to:

- Affordable Housing: The center will market affordable residential units to income eligible Detroit residents. This will happen concurrently with the promotion of market-rate units throughout the development.
- Jobs: Detroiter’s will be assisted in connecting with available jobs, internships, construction, and cultural opportunities created by the development.
- Transit: Located at 2277 Woodward Ave, the Opportunity Center is accessible via the Q-Line, Bus, and/or a short walk from the People Mover; validated parking is available for visitors.

The District Detroit Opportunity Center is open Monday to Thursday from 10 am to 2 pm, and/or by appointment. The center comes equipped with WiFi, tablets, support staff to answer queries, and space for community meetings.

Inevitably, providing a total of 18,000 jobs for Detroit generates the potential for transformative impacts on the city’s socioeconomic fabric. Done strategically, it will invigorate the local economy, lower unemployment rates, and create a ripple effect of economic benefits.

The District Detroit’s multiple housing developments offer opportunities for Detroiters to further integrate into the heart of the city. Such developments, when planned with an emphasis on inclusivity, can serve as the connective tissue, contributing to keeping our communities together.

It is with great pride that I share with our Hispanic Community that there are two Hispanic Vice-Presidents in key leadership positions on the project. This is, to my knowledge, historically unprecedented for CBO projects. It is also noteworthy that The District Detroit project is in our City Council District 6, essentially making Southwest Detroit an extension of Downtown. I encourage Hispanic Contractors to take advantage of the Opportunity Center to inquire about available bids for the project. To this end, the Henry Ford Health System, Detroit Pistons and Michigan State University $2.5 Billion partner project “The Grand” is seeking to qualify contractors for their project.

Current hours of operation for the District Detroit Opportunity Center are Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. or by appointment. For more information call (313) 471-3045, email info@TheDistrictDetroitOC.com or visit TheDistrictDetroitOC.com.

Rogelio Landin has been twice elected and twice appointed to serve on NAC’s for major downtown development projects totaling over $4 Billion in investment over the past seven years.

Continued Funding Secured for 28 Small Business HUBZones in Michigan

LANSING, Mich.—Governor Gretchen Whitmer recently announced Michigan secured continued Small Business Administration (SBA) support for 28 counties and census tracts across Michigan through the SBA’s HUBZone program following petitions to the SBA. The HUBZone program fuels small business growth in historically underutilized zones by awarding 3% of federal contract dollars to HUBZones to businesses every year. The Whitmer-Gilchrist Administration petition also saved HUBZone designations for seven counties and census tracts that would have lost their HUBZone designation if not for the petition.

“The success of our small businesses is critical to growing Michigan’s economy and building a brighter future for our residents,” said Governor Whitmer. “The Small Business Administration’s HUBZone program will continue to support communities across Michigan by connecting our hardworking small business owners and entrepreneurs to federal contract dollars, creating high-skilled, good-paying jobs right here at home. Let’s keep working together to support small businesses and help more small business owners ‘make it’ in Michigan.”

“Thriving small businesses are the cornerstone of local economies and entrepreneurial growth all across Michigan,” said Amy Rencher, Senior Vice President, Small Business Services at the Michigan Economic Development Corporation. “Our Small Business HUBZones leverage federal dollars to continue to support these businesses and bring new opportunity to underserved areas here in our state.”

“This is great news for Albion,” said state Representative Jim Haadsma (D-Battle Creek). “The northeast corner of the city is home to several major employers and Gov. Whitmer’s work to secure a HUBZone designation is another positive step towards more and better paying jobs for the area.”

“Small businesses are the heart and soul of a thriving community, and there is so much promise for small business owners in the U.P.,” said state Representative Jenn Hill (D-Marquette). “I’m glad Governor Whitmer has recognized the extraordinary potential here, and I’ll continue working with her to bring local businesses the support they need.”

“We appreciate this action by Governor Whitmer to designate these additional census tracts to qualify for HUBZone consideration,” said Marty Fittante, CEO of InvestUP. “It will undoubtedly result in providing more opportunity for small businesses in these areas. Within these designated census tracts, qualified businesses will be enabled to compete for unique set-aside government contracts. This creates future prospects to showcase regional capabilities which will encourage small businesses to diversify, grow, and prosper here in the U.P.”

“Governor Whitmer advocating to reinstate the HUB Zone for our area means businesses like ours are able to maintain staffing levels ad be competitive with other companies in our industry across the country,” said Craig Hewett, President of B&P Manufacturing. “This achievement helps create economic growth, right here in Michigan.”

Michigan has 157 certified HUBZone businesses in dozens of counties and census tracts across the state. Companies located in Michigan HUBZones and certified under the HUBZone program also qualify as Geographically Disadvantaged Business Enterprises (GDBEs) for state procurement. In FY21, 59 Michigan HUBZone businesses were awarded $219,272,900 in contracts.

The 28 areas in the Whitmer-Gilchrist Administration petition are home to over 470 small manufacturing sites that have demonstrated their potential for creating jobs and leveraging private investment. Over the last five years, the Michigan Economic Development Corporation business development programs have helped companies in these areas announce projects totaling nearly 500 new jobs and $98.5 million in planned private investment. The planned projects are in plastic, chemical, and electronic manufacturing, food processing, and various service industries.

Supporting Small Businesses

Governor Whitmer is committed to supporting small businesses as Michigan continues growing its economy. She signed a bipartisan tax cut, reduced the tax burden, and increased tax flexibility for small businesses. She signed an executive directive to increase state procurement and contracts with GDBEs and later set a new goal to ensure 20% of total expenditures from state departments and agencies go to GDBEs beginning in FY2023-24. In 2021, Michigan had the fastest start to small business job growth in 23 years and more than 137,000 new small business applications submitted in 2022.

Earlier this year, Governor Whitmer signed a bipartisan supplemental budget to invest $75 million to support small business smart zones, business accelerators, and entrepreneurial activities and announced the new Small Business Support Hubs program to bring comprehensive resources to small businesses across the state.

WORLD'S Cristera War, MX

Cristero War, Mexico 1926–1929

With the Mexican Revolution (1910 - 1921) and the promulgation of the Mexican Constitution of 1917, the church lost legal power and remained under the tutelary guidelines of the government, since the establishment of a new government from the social, political and ideological, implied changes that tried to guarantee the fulfillment of the demands of the revolution. But, when there were difficulties in complying with these, it was accused that the barely consolidated government had relapsed into common practices of the old regime, leading Catholic society reacted to the extreme prohibitions by manifesting itself in various ways. The organization of some social sectors carried out an "economic boycott" in many states of the country. The population was invited not to comply with the payment of taxes, to refrain from using electricity, not to buy fuel, to use the vehicle as little as possible and not to attend public shows, in order to destabilize the economic situation and force the government to give response to demands. Ultimately, the

to the civil and religious command confronting each other politically to obtain power.

However, it was not until 1926 during the presidency of General Plutarco Elías Calles when the so-called "Calles Law" decreed on June 14, 1926, was promulgated and applied, which prohibited teaching religion in schools, as well as that the power ecclesiastic intervene in political decisions, any type of religious cult is celebrated in public spaces and the permanence in the country of priests and fathers of foreign origin. Priests were required to report to civil authorities rather than to ecclesiastical ones, which meant that all spiritual activity had to go through state administration first.

boycott did not bear fruit.

The reaction of the church was immediate, arguing that the "Ley Calles" was unconstitutional, since it violated what referred to religious freedom. Officially, the church ignored the current Constitution, since it could not function subject to arbitrariness. Consequently, the government was forced to respond by closing Catholic schools and convents. "To each measure that the church took, the government responded in the same way, and sometimes with more radical tactics, especially in the regions where Catholicism was stronger, such as in the states of Jalisco, Colima, Michoacán, Querétaro and Guanajuato" (Quezada , 2012, p.196). Some time later, the Mexican Episcopate, backed by the Pope, ordered the closure and suspension of all temples as of July 31, 1926, for the first time since the establishment of Catholicism after the conquest and during the viceroyalty, the church closed its temples.

For a large part of the popular sector, these decisions threatened the good Catholic customs where they deposited their faith, therefore, totally convinced that the fight was in defense of their religiosity, they had no other alternatives than to take up arms leading to the involvement of girls and women. ; among them Carmen Serdán, María de la Luz Espinoza, Carmen

Vélez, Ángela Jiménez, Petra Herrera and some others in command of revolutionary troops and battalions, with ranks of lieutenants, commanders and generals in what was called the Cristero War during the period of 1926 – 1929.

The desire to fight took root in order to protect that institution that provided a sense of existence and belonging. This is how the groups that led the armed uprising, coming from all social classes, but with a greater representation of the middle class and peasants, were called cristeros. The fight was for religious freedom, mainly Catholic, leading to an armed uprising by believers in their defense of the faith.

Given this, the church sought to strengthen the faith in its followers through the creation of women's groups, in charge of carrying out activities to encourage parishioners to get involved in the religious ordinance. Due to this closeness, when the Law was applied and the Cristero conflict broke out, they were affected by the outburst of their spaces, the same places where they were taken into account and now seemed to be on the verge of disappearing. Consequently, they shouldered the responsibility of tackling the problem, motivating husbands and children to join the battle ranks to later naturally intervene in the conflict. Gradually, women became allies of the church against the liberal State, which allowed them to collaborate directly in the pressing social needs of the situation.

Guerra Cristera, MX

Guerra Cristera, México 1926–1929

Con la Revolución Mexicana (1910– 1921) y la promulgación de la Constitución Mexicana de 1917, la iglesia perdió poder jurídico quedando bajo los lineamientos tutelares del gobierno, ya que la instauración de un nuevo gobierno a partir de la restructuración social, política e ideológica, implicaba cambios que procuraban garantizar el cumplimiento de las demandas de la revolución. Pero, al presentarse dificultades en el cumplimiento de éstas, se acusó que el apenas consolidado prohibiciones manifestándose de diversas formas. La organización de algunos sectores sociales llevó a cabo un Boicot Económico en muchos estados del país. Se invitaba a la población a no cumplir con el pago de impuestos, abstenerse de usar energía eléctrica, no comprar combustible, utilizar lo menos posible el vehículo y no asistir a espectáculos públicos, a fin de desestabilizar la situación económica y obligar al gobierno a dar respuesta a las exigencias. Finalmente, el boicot no rindió frutos.

La reacción de la iglesia argumentaba que la “Ley Calles” era anticonstitucional, ya que violaba lo referente a la libertad religiosa. Oficialmente la iglesia desconoció la Constitución vigente, pues no podía funcionar sujeta a una arbitrariedad. Por consiguiente, el gobierno se vio obligado a responder con el cierre de conventos y gobierno había recaído en prácticas comunes del antiguo régimen, llevando a que el mando civil como el religioso se enfrentaran políticamente por la obtención del poder.

Sin embargo, no fue sino hasta 1926 durante la presidencia del General Plutarco Elías Calles cuando se promulgó y aplicó la llamada “Ley Calles”, en la que se impedía al poder eclesiástico intervenir en las decisiones políticas, se prohibía enseñar la religión en las escuelas, se celebrara cualquier tipo de culto religioso en espacios públicos. Se exigía a los sacerdotes que rindieran cuenta a las autoridades civiles antes que a las eclesiásticas, lo cual significaba que toda actividad espiritual tenía que pasar primero por la administración del estado.

La sociedad católica reaccionó ante las extremas

escuelas católicas. “A cada medida que tomaba la iglesia, el gobierno respondía igual, y en ocasiones con tácticas más radicales, especialmente en las regiones donde el catolicismo era más fuerte, como en los estados de Jalisco, Colima, Michoacán, Querétaro y Guanajuato” (Quezada, 2012, p.196). Tiempo después, el Episcopado mexicano respaldado por el Papa ordenó el cierre y suspensión de todos los templos.

Para gran parte del sector popular las decisiones del gobierno amenazaban las buenas costumbres católicas donde depositaban su fe, por ello, convencidos totalmente de que la lucha era en defensa de su religiosidad, no contaron con más alternativas que alzarse en armas llevando al involucramiento de niñas y mujeres; entre ellas Carmen Serdán, María de la Luz Espinoza, Carmen Vélez, Ángela Jiménez, Petra Herrera y algunas más al mando de tropas y batallones revolucionarios, con grados de tenientes, comandantas y generalas en lo que se llamó la Guerra Cristera durante el periodo de 1926 – 1929.

El deseo de lucha se arraigaba con el fin de proteger aquella institución que proporcionaba un sentido de existencia y pertenencia. Fue así como se les denominó cristeros a los grupos que encabezaron el levantamiento armado, provenientes de todas las clases sociales, pero con mayor representación de la clase media y campesina.

Ante ello, la iglesia buscó fortalecer la fe en sus seguidores mediante la creación de agrupaciones femeninas, encargadas de realizar actividades para alentar a los feligreses a involucrarse en la ordenanza religiosa. Debido a dicha cercanía, cuando la Ley se vio aplicada y el conflicto cristero estalló, se vieron afectadas por el arrebató de sus espacios, mismos donde eran tomadas en cuenta y ahora parecían encontrarse en vías de la desaparición. Por consiguiente, cargaron con la responsabilidad de afrontar el problema, motivando a esposos e hijos a sumarse en las filas de batalla para más tarde intervenir ellas naturalmente en el conflicto. Paulatinamente, las mujeres se convirtieron en aliadas de la iglesia frente al Estado liberal, lo cual les permitió colaborar directamente en las apremiantes necesidades sociales de la coyuntura.

United Way Challenge Invests $1 Million+ in Pilots to Expand Financial Opportunities for Detroiters

Six projects move forward in grant process/ receive up to $200,000 each to fundamentally change the financial futures of Detroiters

United Way for Southeastern Michigan, in collaboration with Poverty Solutions at the University of Michigan, has announced the next stage of the Detroit Financial Well-Being Innovation Challenge. Out of an initial pool of over 30 entries, six unique projects have advanced to the Pilot Stage.

Over the 12-month implementation period, six Pilot Stage grantees will receive up to $200,000 and ongoing technical support. Here are the projects moving forward from the Planning Stage, into the Pilot Stage:

- Bikes4Employees: Led by the Detroit Greenways Coalition, this project aims to provide high-quality bicycles to Detroiters lacking reliable transportation, reducing expenses and improving employment sustainability while also promoting health benefits and reducing stress.
- Community Investment Trusts: Under the leadership of Doing Development Differently in Metro Detroit (D4), this initiative seeks to pilot the use of Community Investment Trusts (CITs) to facilitate community ownership of real estate and build wealth in low-income communities.
- Credit Escalator: Led by GreenPath Financial Wellness, the Credit Escalator project plans to change banking systems for communities of color in Detroit. The service combines financial coaching with a personal loan, aiming to improve credit scores as the loan is repaid.
- East Chadsey Condon Alliance (ECCA): Led by the Southwest Economic Solutions Corporation, the ECCA’s Diversified Community Investment Fund (DCIF) offers all Detroiters a chance to invest in and participate in community development projects.

- Family Mobility Savings Program: Under the stewardship of Communities First (CFI), this program will jumpstart emergency savings, helping Detroiters meet their immediate needs while setting the foundation for their financial future.

- Home Repair Clearinghouse: Another initiative by Doing Development Differently in Metro Detroit (D4), this project aims to serve as a hub connecting low-income homeowners with contractors, streamlining the home repair process and advocating for homeowners.

These six projects were chosen from among 17 projects participating in the Planning Stage, which ran from Aug. 1, 2022, through March 31, 2023. During the Planning Stage, grantees worked to test assumptions critical to the success of their new ideas, develop partnerships, and create the processes and materials necessary to launch a functioning pilot.

The six projects advanced to the Pilot Stage demonstrated the strongest readiness to implement and alignment to the goals of the challenge. They will kick off their pilot operations this fall. To assist them throughout the implementation process, United Way will also provide:

- Program evaluation services from University of Michigan’s Poverty Solutions.

- Tailored coaching and consultation services to enhance capacities in pilot implementation, strategic planning, marketing and communications, qualitative data collection, and more.

- Regular opportunities to exchange ideas, reflect on lessons learned from implementation, and share the impact of their work.

United Way will continue to maintain transparent communication with the grantees in the Pilot Stage, the third and penultimate stage of the innovation challenge, to identify any support needs and requests for additional technical assistance. They will also help grantees measure the efficiency and impact of the programs.

Megan Thibos, director of economic mobility at United Way for Southeastern Michigan, highlights the underlying rationale for the challenge: “Detroit residents face unjust systemic barriers to financial stability. This includes high living costs, unpredictable low incomes, and inaccessible credit. These grants aim to support the development of innovative, sustainable solutions to enhance financial opportunities for Detroiters.”

The Financial Well-Being Innovation Challenge originated from the 2020 University of Michigan Poverty Solutions report, The Financial Well-Being of Detroiters: What Do We Know? The findings revealed that a mix of low and volatile incomes and disproportionately high costs make it difficult for Detroiters to effectively manage their finances. The Challenge looks to address these systemic issues with innovative ideas that can completely change opportunities for Detroit families.

Leonymae Aumentado, senior project manager at Poverty Solutions, commended the project teams on their big ideas. “We are thrilled to continue supporting these dedicated organizations in piloting their new and game-changing programs, thoughtfully designed to improve the financial well-being of Detroiters. The Challenge itself is innovative in its approach of providing funding to build and test never-before-done program models as well as providing dedicated research and evaluation support to ensure the project teams can both do the work and rigorously measure the impact of their work,” Aumentado said.

The Detroit Financial Well-being Innovation Challenge will continue through 2026. Scale Stage grants, anticipated to be awarded in late 2024, will fund selected projects up to $1 million based on the results of the Pilot Stage.

The Challenge is made possible through funding from JPMorgan Chase, Comerica Bank, General Motors, and United Way for Southeastern Michigan.

Step 8 -

Use a pastry brush to coat the butter mixture over both sides of the chicken breasts.

Carefully use the pastry brush to baste the chicken breasts with the butter mixture, then bake for 5 minutes.

Step 13 -

Karol G tacha un punto de su “bucket list” tras ser portada de ‘Rolling Stone’

Quien actualmente está haciendo historia en la industria musical y poniendo en alto a la comunidad latina por todo el mundo es Karol G, quien hace unos días estrenó un tema con indirectas a Anuel. Durante este fin de semana, la cantante compartió con sus seguidores una nueva meta que cumplió de su “bucket list” como lo llamó ella, pues se apropió de la portada de la revista ‘Rolling Stone’.

Con el paso del tiempo, la colombiana se ha abierto paso dentro de la música con su inigualable ritmo y sus fantásticas canciones, pero el 2023 está siendo un grande año para Karol G, pues ha alcanzado éxitos que no se veían desde Selena Quintanilla, cuya carrera es un ejemplo a seguir para ‘La Bichota’.

Así, la famosa acudió a su cuenta de Instagram y compartió que ha tachado otra cosa en su "bucket list", protagonizar la portada de la famosa revista ‘Rolling Stone’ y, la noticia la publicó con sensuales fotos que reflejan su gran personalidad y que, por supuesto, han enloquecido a sus millones de fans.

“Hoy en la portada de @Rollingstone. Uno más de mi bucket list”, escribió la famosa en su post y luego agregó los nombres de todas las personas que estuvieron involucradas en esta nueva meta que conquistó.

Así, en las fotos se ve a Karol G luciendo una extensa cabellera rosa, el nuevo color que ha adoptado desde mitad del año, mientras que sus outfits resultaron ser sexis bikinis que enaltecían cada una de sus curvas y belleza natural.

Por supuesto, los accesorios y los objetos con los que jugó durante la sesión fotográfica tuvieron un papel importante para hacer lucir a Karol G como la vida que es. Recientemente, inició su gira por estadios para promover su álbum 'Mañana será bonito (Bichota season)', aunque el pasado, ‘Mañana será bonito’, no deja de ser un fenómeno musical.

No obstante, su vida privada también ha tenido impactos positivos, pues ahora su corazón está siendo sumamente consentido por su nuevo novio, Feid, quien no deja de apoyarla con su carrera artística y con el gran crecimiento que ha tenido últimamente.

Desde que Karol G terminó su relación con Anuel, la famosa argumentaba que estaba soltera y enfocada en ella misma. Pero, ahora goza de la compañía de Feid, aunque han decidido mantener su romance fuera de las cámaras.

Leo Messi y Antonela Rocuzzo festejan con David y Victoria Beckham

El pasado mes de abril, David Beckham se lució con Victoria Beckham por su cumpleaños, tras lo acontecido, ha quedado claro que al exfutbolista y dueño del equipo de MLS, Inter de Miami, le gusta celebrar con los suyos momentos especiales y a lo grande.

Resulta que el pasado viernes, 11 de agosto, Beckham y su esposa salieron de fiesta con diversos amigos para celebrar la victoria del Inter de Miami sobre la escuadra del Charlotte FC, en el contexto de la Leagues Cup.

En el festejo no podía faltar la flamante estrella del equipo, Lionel Messi, quien estuvo acompañado por su esposa Antonela Rocuzzo.

La compañera de vida del astro argentino se dio el tiempo de convivir y tomarse fotos con Victoria Beckham.

De acuerdo con diversos reportes periodísticos, las dos parejas de famosos estuvieron acompañadas por otras dos superestrellas del fútbol, Sergio Busquets y Jordi Alba. La esposa de Busquets, Elena, pasó un momento agradable con Victoria y Antonela.

La velada fue documentada en el perfil de David Beckham, quien se retrató con los atletas. Todos lucieron sumamente relajados y sonrientes, a pesar de estar de fiesta, los futbolista vestían informales.

De acuerdo con las imágenes compartidas, por Antonela, el goleador estuvo ataviado con una camiseta verde agua, así como también con unos pantalones claros. En tanto, ella vistió top oscuro dejando al descubierto su abdomen definido, con unos pantalones cargo verde olivo.

En el perfil de Instagram de la modelo, se pueden apreciar imágenes en donde está bailando al lado de su esposo, además de una instantánea en la que están abrazados muy

Los Beckham fieles a su estilo y glamour fueron los más formales de la noche, Victoria portó un atuendo completamente oscuro con el cabello suelto y un maquillaje tenue haciendo resaltar de forma natural su belleza. Por su parte, David usó una camisa azul cielo.

Desde que Lionel Messi y Antonela Rocuzzo decidieron dejar París para vivir una nueva etapa del futbolista en Miami, la pareja ha sido una de las más seguidas no solo por los aficionados al fútbol, sino también por la prensa de espectáculos, quienes no dejan de seguirle los pasos a los argentinos.

'Blue Beetle': el filme latino de DC que es casi una carta de amor a la familia

Llena de perseverancia, de aprendizaje y de mensajes de amor. Así considera el director puertorriqueño Ángel Manuel Soto a su nueva película 'Blue Beetle', que se estrena este 18 de agosto en las salas de cine y que seguramente llenará de orgullo a las familias latinas por su moraleja de esperanza, que asegura que todo lo podemos crear.

En entrevista con Telemundo, con la presentadora de noticias Nicole Suárez, el originario de San Juan, Puerto Rico, compartió con gusto todos los sentimientos y pensamientos que le representa este trabajo en Hollywood, pues de haber crecido con el sueño de hacer cine en las calles de su barrio a dirigir una película de DC, ha sido una revolución de emociones en su orgullo como latino.

Soto, quien se une a la lista de hispanos que ponen el alto el nombre de su país y que triunfan en Hollywood, está feliz y orgulloso de poder dirigir la historia de 'Blue Beetle', la película del escarabajo de las historietas que se presenta este 2023 con un conmovedor relato de la familia Reyes, en donde el hijo 'Jaime Reyes', interpretado por Xolo

Maridueña, se convierte en el insecto super poderoso.

"Blue Beetle terminó representando que nosotros podemos ser héroes de nuestras propias historias, con ayuda de nuestras familias, con ayuda de quienes más nos quieren, podemos encontrar la fuerza dentro de nosotros para ser los superhéroes que nosotros necesitamos", contó el director.

"Es una carta de amor a la familia, es una carta de amor a las personas que vinieron antes que nosotros, honrando ese legado que nos dejaron podemos hacer cosas grandes. Al final yo aprendí como en la película, todo lo que puedes imaginar, lo puedes crear. Todo es se puede", dijo el puertorriqueño.

El director de 'Blue Beetle' aseguró que antes de leer el guión tenía miedo de hacer un trabajo lleno de clichés latinoamericanos, pero que no fue sino hasta leer el trabajo del mexicano Gareth Dunet Alcocer con el libreto que se dio cuenta que la familia Reyes sería una oportunidad para hacer un trabajo de orgullo latino.

"Tenía duda. Yo tenía problemas de cómo nos han representado en Hollywood, y tenía miedo de que esta oportunidad tan grande se perdiera en los clichés y los estereotipos. No fue hasta que leí el guión de Gareth Dunnet Alcocer, que es mexicano de Querétaro, me di cuenta que 'Blue Beetle' y la familia Reyes estaban en buenas manos", platicó el director de la película.

"El éxito que esta película pueda tener, no es un éxito que le corresponda a esta película, yo creo que es un éxito que todos los latinos podemos abrazar, porque si bien esta es la primera, no quiero que sea la última".

- ÁNGEL MANUEL SOTO, SOBRE EL TRABAJO EN 'BLUE BEETLE'

Sobre el lado mexicano que se ve en la película, el artista comentó que la familia representa la experiencia de tres diferentes generaciones, la que nació en México, la que creció en Estados Unidos, y la que nació en Estados Unidos, donde forman una increíble historia con George Lopez, como el personaje del tío excéntrico, y Adriana Barraza, como la abuela.

"Es la primera vez que no solamente tenemos un actor latino al frente sino que él es el titular, su familia también son titulares y son todos latinos. El escritor es latino, el director es latino, somos latinos contando una historia", expresó Soto.

Frente a un grupo de estudiantes invitados a la conversación en las instalaciones de Telemundo Center, Ángel Manuel Soto buscó crear la motivación en los jóvenes, asegurando que aún y con las limitaciones que un chico de Puerto Rico pudo enfrentar, ahora él disfruta de esta oportunidad de brillar en la industria cinematográfica más importante del planeta.

"Yo nunca pensé que una oportunidad como ésta me iba a llegar a mí, para un chamaquito de Puerto Rico, se veía bien lejano, pero con mucho trabajo, mucha perseverancia, me di cuenta que estaba limitando mi propio sueño, no estaba pensando en grande", contó.

"Si yo lo pude hacer, cualquier jovencito aquí puede lograrlo, porque si yo lo logré desde Puerto Rico con todas mis limitaciones, ustedes que están aquí pueden lograrlo también", finalizó.

Eva Longoria ya es abuela; la hija de su esposo, Pepe Bastón, tuvo un niño

El pasado mes de abril, se dio a conocer que la actriz Eva Longoria sería abuela, luego de que se revelara que Natalia Bastón Esperón pronto debutaría como mamá, tras casi dos años de matrimonio con el empresario José María Eugui Ysita.

En 2017, Bastón Esperón comenzó su noviazgo con Eugui Ysita, tras unir sus vidas, la hija de la actriz Natalia Esperón y Pepe Bastón hace unos meses decidieron que era el momento de agrandar su familia tras casi dos años de matrimonio.

La feliz pareja tuvo un varón, quien será bautizado con el nombre de su padre. Hace unos días, Natalia Esperón dio a conocer la noticia de la llegada del primer bebé de su hija vía Instagram, donde se mostró feliz por el acontecimiento.

“Ya soy abuela, ¡Pronto les voy a presentar a mi gordito guapo!” escribió. La actriz de 48 años. De acuerdo con los medios de comunicación de México, no hay mucha información respecto a la llegada del pequeño José María Eugui Bastón, por lo que se desconocen más detalles de su nacimiento.

Por el momento, el padre de Natalia, Pepe Bastón ni su esposa, Eva Longoria, quien públicamente ha dicho que ama a México, se ha manifestado al respecto. Toda la familia ha sido mesurada con la llegada de nuevo integrante de la familia.

Longoria, de 48 años, suele compartir en sus perfiles de redes sociales parte de lo que vive en su nicho familiar, sin embargo, no ha emitido un post sobre el nacimiento de quien es su primer nieto.

A diferencia de sus padres, Natalia Bastón prefirió dedicarse a algo distinto con el medio del espectáculo, ya que ha apostado por tener su propia agencia de relaciones públicas, así como también a generar contenido de redes sociales enfocado a la mercadotecnia.

En tanto, José María Eugui Ysita se dedica a la ingeniería y es socio de una importante compañía que se dedica al diseño y fabricación de luminarias led, de acuerdo con los medios de comunicación de México.

Aunque los papás debutantes han sido muy sigilosos con la llegada de su primer hijo, se espera que en las próximas semanas se den a conocer más detalles del nacimiento de José María.

BIG KEYWORTH CROWD DISAPPOINTED

Detroit City's fading playoff hopes took another hit last weekend. 7,022 spectators packed into historic Keyworth Stadium on a beautiful summer night, but the home team did far less to inspire the crowd than the crowd put in to inspire them. With the Northern Guard in full voice before kick-off and right up to the final whistle, this would have been the perfect night to make a statement about the team's intention for the final stretch of the regular season.

The Charleston Battery had played a tough 1-1 draw in Louisville during the week and could have been tired at the end of a three match week. However, they took a physical approach to the game right from the start. Referee Abdou Ndiaye used a quick whistle to reign in any potential trouble during the first half. After the Battery set the tone, Le Rouge responded with Matt Lewis being booked in the 7th minute. Both teams played tough, but never dirty during what turned into a midfield battle of attrition.

City goalkeeper Nate Steinwascher made one excellent save, low to his right in the 15th minute, from Augustine Williams on the Battery's best foray forward in the first half. City responded with a couple of off target shots that failed to trouble Trey Muse at the other end. The best effort came on a long range attempt from Dario Suarez that went over the bar.

Not much changed during the opening exchanges of the second half. The City players objected to a couple challenges that went unsanctioned, leaving Rhys Williams limping and Michael Bryant certainly bruised. Eventually, the Battery broke the deadlock with 20 minutes remaining. A turnover in midfield sent the visitors breaking on the left. Pierre Reedy had an age to pick out a cross and even with a slight deflection it hit Williams on the chest. He controlled it beautifully and slammed his shot past Steinwascher from close range. As Trevor James looked down his bench to see if there was a goal to be found, he didn't see much. Yazeed Mathews missed the game through injury. Skage Simonsen just returned after missing recent action and wasn't introduced. Connor Rutz came on late, but hasn't scored in ages.

Le Rouge had a number of set pieces late on, but couldn't direct anything on goal. Even at the death hope remained, but Matt Lewis' header from a free kick went wide of the goal and just too far in front of onrushing Devon Amoo-Mensah, leaving City with yet another 1-0 loss. The numbers don't lie. One shot on goal is all they could muster against the Battery. City has the fourth fewest goals conceded in the USL Championship, just 24 in 24 games. The defending has been solid and organized, able to handle changing personnel, including the absence of captain Stephen Carroll on Saturday. But, the offense is the absolute bottom of the league with room to spare. They have managed just 17 goals. Remembering that 6 of them came in wins over El Paso and Hartford, shows just how anemic the attack has been all season.

The second worst attack in the league arrives at Keyworth on Saturday night. The Las Vegas Lights, with former DCFC forward Pato Botello Faz, have scored only 22 goals all season. Still, that's five more than DCFC. Five more goals in the right games, would have City much further up the table than they are now. They sit just five points out of the last playoff spot, but it seems like a much larger gap given the woeful attack. Defense and Steinwascher will keep them in nearly every game, but until somebody figures out how to score or the team becomes more of a threat from set pieces they won't win many.

EDITORIAL OPINION

“Surprise, Legal Mexican Farmworkers?”

By Raoul Lowery Contreras

In 2022 the United States Department of Labor performed its biannual survey of farmworkers in the U.S. and determined 1.18 million farmworkers work in the country. That is dramatically lower than in 1950.

In 1950 most farm workers were American citizen white men and women. No longer. Most are Mexican.

Problem? Almost half are working in the U.S. illegally. Solution? There is one and it works. It is not strict law enforcement or massive misinformation by throaty whiners.

We know this because the biannual survey officially known as the National Agricultural Workers Survey (NAWS) is done every two years by the Department of Labor. Using personal interviews by professionals, the Department estimates that “about” half of all farmworkers in the U.S. are here working illegally, something between 400,000 & 600,000.

In the 1989-1991 survey the estimate of illegal workers was 14%. In the 1999-2001 survey, the estimate: 55%. In the 2018-2020 survey, the estimated number was made after deducting the 30% who were born in the U.S., 6% legal immigrants, 23% who were authorized workers such as “Dreamers” with work permits, “green card” holders, etc. and 41% without work authorizations.

The problem: somewhere near half of all farmworkers in the U.S. are working illegally.

One look around my San Diego County suggests the numbers are different here than the survey finds nationally. 1st, San Diego County is ranked tenth agriculturally in the U.S. thus there is more agriculture than in 90% of U.S. Counties. Secondly, what is left of the California avocado industry is based in San Diego and avocados are labor intensive. Labor intensive means Mexican labor. The same is true about Flower/Nursery production in North County.

In the Rainbow area east of Fallbrook, there is an area known as Oaxaca (Wah-haw-cah) North, Mixtec Indians from the southern Mexican state of Oaxaca chose years ago to establish their northernmost outpost. There among tending and growing millions of dollars of flowers, nursery plants and trees, only owners aren’t short, dark Indios.

Critics flood letters to the editor with complaints about these “criminals, thieves who steal jobs from hungry willing worker American men” and then have the gall to send their ill-gotten pay home to feed their families in Oaxaca, Mexico.

Those critics are wrong. First, the money. Studies show that for every American dollar that crosses south into Mexico some returns to the U.S. After all, the Mexicans pay for what they buy in the U.S. Mexico is now America's number one trading partner, thus we speak of millions of dollars every minute of the day. Secondly illegal workers pay taxes just like the rest of us.

Then there’s the thousands of Mexicans who clog my special Senti lane at the border. They force me to spend up to an hour to cross back into the U.S. They paid the exact $125 for a Senti pass that allows us to use special lanes to cross the border. Without that pass it could take up to 8 hours to cross the border. These thousands of legal Mexicans choke the border so they can... Spend their money in San Diego.

Back to illegal farmworkers. The solution is the American H2a temporary farmworker program. Use of this program has increased “sevenfold” -- that’s seven times in the past 17 years.

The program started growing under President George W. Bush, the best and smartest supporter of immigration reform in modern history. In 2005, 48 thousand Mexican farmworkers were approved; 371,000 in 2022.

The government declares an area worker shortage and certifies applicant farmers to use the program. Farmers must provide transportation from Mexico, housing and pay a state-approved minimum wage. How do I know this? Starting in February every morning hundreds of mostly young Mexican men gathered at the border crossing between Tijuana and San Diego each with a modern four roller suitcase loading onto American charter buses to be driven or escorted across the border H2a papers in hand. Then they were on their way to the airport or by bus to Fresno to pick grapes, Yakima Valley to pick apples and cherries, North Dakota to pick sugar beets, etc., etc.

All perfectly legal. 371,000 down, 400,000 to go.

What to Know About Pulmonary Arterial Hypertension

(StatePoint) Each year, an estimated 500-1,000 people nationwide are diagnosed with pulmonary arterial hypertension (PAH). While there’s currently no cure, treatment can help control symptoms and improve quality of life.

The American Lung Association, with support from Janssen, launched a new campaign to ensure patients get an earlier, accurate PAH diagnosis and feel empowered to participate in discussions regarding treatment options. As part of the campaign, they’re also sharing insights from Lindsay T., a patient living with PAH.

- PAH defined: PAH is a progressive disorder and one form of a broader condition known as pulmonary hypertension, which is high blood pressure in the lungs. In PAH, this increased pressure in the vessels is caused by obstruction in the small arteries in the lung, and can occur for a variety of reasons.
- Causes: While the cause of PAH is usually unknown, about 15-20% of patients have inherited the condition. Most common in women ages 30-60, PAH disproportionately impacts African American and Hispanic women.
- Symptoms: Individuals are initially asymptomatic and then begin to experience symptoms similar to other common lung diseases, such as shortness of breath and fatigue. For this reason, PAH can be difficult to diagnose -- 74% of patients are diagnosed in advanced stages of the disease. Eventually, symptoms can include swelling of the feet, legs, abdomen and neck, dizziness and fainting spells, chest pain, heart palpitations, and lips and fingers turning blue.

“When I was 23, I started noticing that when I would walk, I would get out of breath really easily. At first, I thought I was just out of shape. It took about a year for my doctors to say it was pulmonary arterial hypertension,” says Lindsay.

- Diagnosis: To confirm diagnosis, a right heart catheterization is needed to measure pressure in the heart and lungs. Providers will typically rule out other common diseases with less invasive tests first. An accurate diagnosis of the correct type of pulmonary hypertension helps ensure prompt, optimal treatment. When PAH is suspected, patients should be referred to a PAH specialist at an accredited center. Left untreated, PAH compromises heart function, which can lead to heart failure and even death.
- Treatment: Patients should see their specialist regularly for structured evaluations. This allows for tailored treatment plans.

Treatment may include supportive therapies, such as supplemental oxygen, pulmonary rehabilitation and diuretic medications, as well as specific treatment, including medications that dilate blood vessels and affect the vasculature to reduce the increased resistance of blood flow that contributes to right-sided heart failure.

There are many clinical trials occurring right now. Those interested should speak with their healthcare provider or visit Clinicaltrials.gov.

- Tracking: Tracking symptoms is a vital part of self-management of the condition.

“One of the most important things to do while living with PAH is to learn to listen to your body because it’ll tell you if you need something, and that’s information that you can talk about with your healthcare team,” says Lindsay, who after noticing worsening symptoms, spoke to her specialist who then started her on a new medication.

Lindsay also advises patients to become their own advocates. “Research empowered me to take control of my diagnosis and actually make decisions for my healthcare,” she says.

- Support: Support groups give patients a chance to connect with others living with their condition. Patients can also learn more at Lung.org/PAH.

While PAH is a serious, potentially life-threatening condition, proper treatment can make the disease manageable. After finding the right treatment plan, Lindsay is thriving.

“This life I lead today, I’m physically active. I teach high school algebra. I’m successfully managing my PAH. It’s not easy, but it’s possible,” says Lindsay.

Qué saber sobre la hipertensión arterial pulmonar

(StatePoint) Cada año, entre 500 y 1000 personas en todo el país son diagnosticadas con hipertensión arterial pulmonar (HAP). Si bien actualmente no existe una cura, el tratamiento puede ayudar a controlar los síntomas y mejorar la calidad de vida.

La Asociación Estadounidense del Pulmón, con el apoyo de Janssen, lanzó una nueva campaña para garantizar que los pacientes obtengan un diagnóstico preciso y temprano de HAP y se sientan capacitados para participar en las discusiones sobre las opciones de tratamiento. Como parte de la campaña, también comparten las ideas de Lindsay T., una paciente que vive con HAP.

- Definición de PAH: PAH es un trastorno progresivo y una forma de una condición más amplia conocida como hipertensión pulmonar, que es presión arterial alta en los pulmones. En la PAH, este aumento de la presión en los vasos es causado por la obstrucción de las arterias pequeñas en el pulmón y puede ocurrir por una variedad de razones.

- Causas: aunque generalmente se desconoce la causa de la HAP, alrededor del 15 al 20 % de los pacientes han heredado la afección. Más común en mujeres de 30 a 60 años, la PAH afecta de manera desproporcionada a las mujeres afroamericanas e hispanas.
- Síntomas: las personas inicialmente son asintomáticas y luego comienzan a experimentar síntomas similares a otras enfermedades pulmonares comunes, como dificultad para respirar y fatiga. Por esta razón, la PAH puede ser difícil de diagnosticar: el 74 % de los pacientes son diagnosticados en etapas avanzadas de la enfermedad. Eventualmente, los síntomas pueden incluir hinchazón de los pies, las piernas, el abdomen y el cuello, mareos y desmayos, dolor en el pecho, palpitaciones y labios y dedos que se vuelven azules.

“Cuando tenía 23 años, comencé a notar que cuando caminaba, me quedaba sin aliento muy fácilmente. Al principio, pensé que estaba fuera de forma. Mis médicos tardaron alrededor de un año en decir que era hipertensión arterial pulmonar”, dice Lindsay.

- Diagnóstico: Para confirmar el diagnóstico, se necesita un cateterismo del corazón derecho para medir la presión en el corazón y los pulmones. Los proveedores generalmente descartarán otras enfermedades comunes primero con pruebas menos invasivas. Un diagnóstico preciso del tipo correcto de hipertensión pulmonar ayuda a garantizar un tratamiento rápido y óptimo. Cuando se sospecha HAP, los pacientes deben ser derivados a un especialista en HAP en un centro acreditado. Si no se trata, la PAH compromete la función cardíaca, lo que puede provocar insuficiencia cardíaca e incluso la muerte.
- Tratamiento: Los pacientes deben ver a su especialista regularmente para evaluaciones estructuradas. Esto permite planes de tratamiento personalizados.

El tratamiento puede incluir terapias de apoyo, como oxígeno suplementario, rehabilitación pulmonar y medicamentos diuréticos, así como un tratamiento específico, incluidos medicamentos que dilatan los vasos sanguíneos y afectan la vasculatura para reducir el aumento de la resistencia del flujo sanguíneo que contribuye a la insuficiencia cardíaca del lado derecho.

Actualmente se están realizando muchos ensayos clínicos. Los interesados deben hablar con su proveedor de atención médica o visitar Clinicaltrials.gov.

- Seguimiento: El seguimiento de los síntomas es una parte vital del autocontrol de la afección.

"Una de las cosas más importantes que debe hacer mientras vive con PAH es aprender a escuchar su cuerpo porque le dirá si necesita algo, y esa es información de la que puede hablar con su equipo de atención médica", dice Lindsay, quien después de notar un empeoramiento de los síntomas, habló con su especialista, quien luego le indicó un nuevo medicamento.

Lindsay también aconseja a los pacientes que se conviertan en sus propios defensores. “La investigación me permitió tomar el control de mi diagnóstico y, de hecho, tomar decisiones sobre mi atención médica”, dice.

- Apoyo: Los grupos de apoyo brindan a los pacientes la oportunidad de conectarse con otras personas que viven con su afección. Los pacientes también pueden obtener más información en Lung.org/PAH.

Si bien la PAH es una afección grave y potencialmente mortal, el tratamiento adecuado puede hacer que la enfermedad sea manejable. Después de encontrar el plan de tratamiento adecuado, Lindsay está prosperando.

“Esta vida que llevo hoy, soy físicamente activo. Enseño álgebra de secundaria. Estoy manejando con éxito mi HAP. No es fácil, pero es posible”, dice Lindsay.

Sixto Diaz Rodriguez, Once Called a Man of Mystery

It was never about the financial gain; it was about sharing his poetic words layered to his own melody with the world, and the world listened. Rodriguez's musical success didn't come to him through his American audience but instead through South Africa during the tumultuous time of Apartheid. Although some of his music was banned during this regime, his music fueled a movement that brought South Africa's comfort and social consciousness to the forefront.

Rodriguez expressed his political interest in his community by running for office, including running for City Council and later for Mayor of the City of Detroit. His music was used as a vehicle for social justice and equality, so much so that he grabbed the attention of South African President Nelson Mandela. When Mandela visited Detroit in 1990, he hoped to meet Rodriguez; unfortunately, the meeting never occurred. However, that didn't stop the momentum of his music from spreading solace and connecting people worldwide.

Last Saturday, August 12, a few days after Rodriguez was laid to rest, family, friends, and visitors gathered at the Majestic Theater in his memory. The mood was not sorrowful at all; instead, optimistic. The main room was dimly lit except for the stage, where those who loved him took turns commemorating his memory by singing his songs or just sharing a few words. Along the side of the room were photos, album covers, awards, and even newspaper clippings that displayed his musical impact.

His influence on human rights and social change was documented in the Oscar-winning documentary Searchin' for Sugar Man, released in 2012. Rodriguez held a record deal with Motown Records, where Clarence Avant was Chairman. As Rodriguez began to tour and could see the change he was making, he said to an audience, "Thank you for keeping me alive." The city of Detroit, particularly Southwest, is certainly keeping his legacy alive. Located on W. Vernor facing the Vernor Food Center parking lot to the east is a mural of Rodriguez painted by muralist Elton Monroy Durán.

In 2015, Durán moved to Detroit from the Hidalgo region of Mexico. While making Detroit home, he soon discovered he didn't feel as connected until finding the music of Rodriguez. During the pandemic in 2020, Durán completed the mural in time for Rodriguez's birthday. The parallels between Durán and Rodriguez's life met in multiple ways while the mural was painted. Durán soon discovered the building he was painting housed the same apartment Rodriguez and his three daughters once lived in. Durán describes his personal experience throughout the creation process as "Kind of like destiny."

Durán was on the lift, painting the mural during a time when Black Lives Matter Marches took to the street all across the country. "The Black Lives Matter march came down this very street when I was painting. So, I was recording from up there. The Black Live Matter march is much like the movements happening in South Africa," Durán says. He soon connected with Rodriguez personally. "I can now feel and see what he meant with his lyrics; he was talking about these streets."

Sixto Diaz Rodriguez leaves behind wife, Konny Rodriguez, and three daughters, Eva, Sandra, and Regan Rodriguez.

Sixto Díaz Rodríguez, el llamado Hombre Misterioso

Como un joven adulto discreto, actuaría localmente en toda la ciudad de Detroit y mientras continuaba su carrera musical, obtuvo un trabajo en el sector manufacturero de la industria automotriz, ganándose la vida honradamente como muchos habitantes de Detroit de los años 60 y 70.

Nunca le interesó el dinero; se trataba de compartir sus palabras, superpuestas a su propia melodía, y el mundo lo escuchó. El éxito musical de Rodríguez no le llegó a través de su audiencia estadounidense, sino a través de Sudáfrica durante la tumultuosa época del apartheid. Aunque parte de su música fue prohibida durante este régimen, su música impulsó un movimiento que puso en primer plano la comodidad y la conciencia social de Sudáfrica.

Rodríguez expresó su interés político en su comunidad al postularse para un cargo público, para el Concejo Municipal y luego como alcalde de la Ciudad de Detroit. Su música fue utilizada como vehículo para la justicia social y la igualdad, tanto que llamó la atención del presidente sudafricano Nelson Mandela. Cuando Mandela visitó Detroit en 1990, esperaba conocer a Rodríguez; desafortunadamente, la reunión nunca se dio. Sin embargo, eso no impidió que el impulso de su música difundiera consuelo y conectara a personas de todo el mundo.

El pasado sábado 12 de agosto, pocos días después del entierro de Rodríguez, familiares, amigos y visitantes se reunieron en el Teatro Majestic en su memoria. El ánimo no era triste en absoluto, sino optimista. La sala principal estaba tenuemente iluminada a excepción del escenario, donde sus seres queridos se turnaban para conmemorarlo, cantando sus canciones o simplemente compartiendo algunas palabras. Al costado de la sala había fotos, portadas de álbumes, premios e incluso recortes de periódicos que mostraban su impacto musical.

Su influencia en los derechos humanos y el cambio social se plasmó en el documental ganador del Oscar Searchin' for Sugar Man, lanzado en 2012. Rodríguez tenía un contrato discográfico con Motown Records, donde Clarence Avant era el presidente. Cuando Rodríguez comenzó a viajar y pudo ver el cambio que estaba generando, le dijo a la audiencia: "Gracias por mantenerme con vida". La ciudad de Detroit, particularmente el suroeste, ciertamente mantiene vivo su legado. Ubicado en W. Vernor, al este del estacionamiento del Vernor Food Center, está un mural de Rodríguez pintado por el muralista Elton Monroy

Durán.

En 2015, Durán se mudó a Detroit desde la región de Hidalgo, México. Mientras hacía de Detroit su hogar, descubrió que no se sentía tan conectado, hasta que encontró la música de Rodríguez. Durante la pandemia de 2020, Durán completó el mural a tiempo para el cumpleaños de Rodríguez. Los paralelismos entre la vida de Durán y Rodríguez se encontraron de múltiples maneras mientras se pintaba el mural. Durán pronto descubrió que el edificio que estaba pintando albergaba el mismo apartamento en el que alguna vez vivieron Rodríguez y sus tres hijas. Durán describe su experiencia personal a lo largo del proceso de creación como "Algo así como el destino".

Durán estaba en el ascensor, pintando el mural durante el tiempo en que las marchas de Black Lives Matter tomaron las calles en todo el país. "La marcha de Black Lives Matter cruzó esta misma calle cuando estaba pintando. Entonces, estaba grabando desde allí. La marcha de Black Live Matter es muy parecida a los movimientos que ocurrieron en Sudáfrica", comentó Durán. Pronto se conectó personalmente con Rodríguez. "Ahora puedo sentir y ver lo que quiso decir con sus letras; estaba hablando de estas calles".

Sixto Díaz Rodríguez dejó a su esposa, Konny Rodríguez, y tres hijas, Eva, Sandra y Regan Rodríguez.

Amber Ogden es una escritora independiente que nació y creció en Detroit. Ha realizado publicaciones en Forbes, Chevy in the D, Model D y Rachel Ray Every Day. Le gusta el arte y comer en la ciudad en su tiempo libre.
